A newsletter for staff, faculty and alumni of George Brown College

MAY 31, 2005 VOL. 22 NO. 9

Anne Sado is joined by students in applauding Premier Dalton McGuinty (seated second from the right) for the provincial government's budgetary commitment to post-secondary education and training on May 13, 2005 at Ryerson University.

Showing us the money

George Brown College's participation in the Rae Review process and advocacy through the Fund Colleges Now campaign has paid off — in the form of a $6.2-billion commitment to post-secondary education by the Ontario government.

This commitment, to be met by 2009-10, is the largest multi-year investment in post-secondary education and training in 40 years, said Ontario Minister of Finance, Greg Sorbara when the 2005 budget was released. The reason for investing so much in higher learning and training is to create new jobs and generate economic growth.

Most budgets, both provincial and federal, are often dubbed in the media by what takes the highest priority. After the announcement was made on May 11, 2005, this budget was being referred to as the "post-secondary education budget" — a major victory for universities and colleges across Ontario.

"Our sector has never before come together so uniformly," said Anne Sado, GBC President. "The college community's contributions in town hall meetings, Rae Review consultations, media discussions and the online petition has resulted in a clear victory."

Some highlights of the budget include:

- Targeting under-represented groups including Aboriginals, persons with disabilities, and those who are the first in their family to attend post-secondary education
- Reforming apprenticeship education to include a one-stop training and employment system, improving access to labour markets, and setting objectives to increase the number of new entrants
- Increasing access for new Canadians and low-income families with tuition grants, expansion of loan eligibility, and parental interest relief
- Continuing the tuition freeze for 2005-06 and the implementation of a new tuition framework by September 2006 with the help of post-secondary institutions and students
- Creating a multi-year agreement between the government and institutions that set out enrolment and quality improvement targets

SAM makes it simple

A new software program is now being used to deliver the most popular computer course at the college, replacing the seven-year-old e-Course system.

SAM, or Skills Assessment Manager, will be used by about 6,000 full-time George Brown students each year to complete the mandatory COMP1082 course, a basic computer class that ensures all students are computer literate when they graduate.

The technology around e-Course was outdated and needed to be replaced by a more advanced and flexible program, said Sandra Neill, Professor, Computer Skills and Applications program, at Learning Innovations and Academic Development (LIAD).

E-Course did not take into account the vast differences in computer skills among students coming to George Brown — everyone had to be tested on even the most basic tasks no matter how computer literate they were, Neill explained.

But with SAM, a student will first complete an assessment test to determine what he or she already knows and the SAM software automatically eliminates the tasks the student can already do from the rest of the training — and from the customized tests the student ultimately takes to pass the course.

"With this new feature, students do not need to spend time training on content they already know," said Andrew Cheesman, a computer lab facilitator at St. James. He worked with students when e-Course was still in use and now with SAM. To him, there is no question that SAM is a better piece of software.

"Students required much more attention from the facilitators while they were doing their training with e-Course than they do with SAM which just shows that SAM is teaching them more efficiently."

Students can complete their training in the computer labs at St. James, Casa Loma and Ryerson or they can download the software on to their home computers. The time it takes to complete the course depends on how much the student already knows and how quickly

In memory of

On May 25, 2005, the friends, colleagues and family of Michael Ludolph gathered to remember the former director of the Faculty of Technology and pay tribute to his hard work and dedication to the college and its students.

Michael passed away on April 25, 2005 after battling illness for three years — a fact that many people who worked with him were completely unaware of.

Those at the reflection service were invited to say a few words about Michael including Joy McKinnon, Dean of the Faculty of Technology; Nancy Hood, Executive Director of Human Resources; Tom Stephenson, Manager of Apprenticeship Operations; Mark Krantzberg, a professor in the Construction and Environment — Regulations & Compliance program; Clint Kissoon, co-ordinator of the Construction Engineering Technician program; Ed Ksenych, a professor in Community Services; Edmund Rodrigues from the Ministry of the Environment; and Anne Sado, President.

Some had prepared speaking notes while others had not but everyone spoke from the heart about Michael's diplomacy, politeness, professionalism, dedication to the students and to the college, mentorship, support, love of travel and warm smile that inevitably broke out into "the laugh."

Three scholarships have been established in memory of Michael — The Michael Ludolph Construction Innovation Award, The Ontario Building Officials Scholarship in Memory of Michael Ludolph and the GBC Construction and Environment — Regulations & Compliance Award in Memory of Michael Ludolph.

If you would like to contribute to the GBC award, please contact Erin Agnew at ext. 4292 or eagnew@gbrownc.on.ca.

Michael Ludolph congratulates student James Follett on winning the tuition draw for the Construction and Environment — Regulations & Compliance program on November 24, 2004.

Comings and Goings will be featured in every third issue of City College News. It will list those who are new to the college, those who have left the college, those who have transferred to a new department or position and those who have passed away. If you have any questions or concerns regarding Comings and Goings, please contact Carolyn Wong at cwong@gbrownc.on.ca or at ext. 4476.

Read all about it

Because George Brown College is a large, complex organization, keeping up-to-date on what individuals and departments are up to can be challenging. But there is one, simple way everyone in the college can be kept in the loop — through newsletters.

Several programs and departments have established their own newsletters to communicate with many different audiences like students, faculty, staff, admin and industry partners.

Many of these newsletters can be found on the George Brown College website for easy downloading and printing. Just go to www.georgebrown.ca/newsletters.html and get the latest news, event listings and happenings in and around the college.

If you have a newsletter that you would like listed on this webpage, please contact Katrina Avrutov, the webmaster at webmaster@gbrownc.on.ca.

he or she can learn new skills, said Neill. The initial assessment reduces redundancy and frees up time that can be dedicated to other courses.

The self-directed class is just one of a number of courses in the Computer Skills and Applications (CSA) program offered through LIAD. There are more advanced and customized computer courses for specific programs such as Fashion Management and the Bachelor of Applied Business that will also be delivered by SAM.

Because so many students take the COMP1082 course, the process of inputting grades to Banner had to be automated. Without CSA technologist Miguel Roman, we would never have been able to do this, said Neill.

"Implementing SAM wouldn't have been possible without such a talented and dedicated CSA team including Denise Pontone, Michelle Lee, James Brouwer, Miguel Roman and Cal Shaw."

■ In celebration of Hearing Awareness Month, George Brown College participated in MAYFEST on Friday, May 13, 2005. The all-day event, held at St. Lawrence Market, featured crafts, information booths, Deaf entertainment and children's events. Representatives from the college's Deaf & Hard of Hearing Services and deaf studies programs such as American Sign Language – English Interpreter, American Sign Language and Literacy Instructor, and Intervenor for Deaf-Blind Persons provided information to visitors about George Brown's Deaf community. MAYFEST gave visitors, both Deaf and hearing, a great opportunity to experience the unique nature of Deaf culture.

■ On Thursday, May 12, 2005, a unique group of students — The Top 20 Under 20 — visited George Brown College for a crash-course in image consulting and business and dining etiquette. The Top 20 Under 20 is a national awards program organized by Youth in Motion, a charitable group that designs and implements motivational career programs for youth. The winners, chosen based on their leadership, innovation, entrepreneurial spirit and achievements, participated in a week-long Leadership Summit which included activities with Habitat for Humanity, the Rogers Centre, and George Brown College. Daniela Mastragostino, an image consultant and ConEd instructor, went through the do's and don'ts of corporate and social etiquette, dress code and dining etiquette in a workshop called Create your Image for Success. The students were so engaged in the session they bombarded her with questions about everything from what colour socks should be worn to how to eat soup properly. The workshop continued at Siegfried's where the students had to use their newly acquired dining etiquette skills during a dinner prepared by the Chef School students. The group clearly enjoyed their time at George Brown and the entire Top 20 Under 20 experience. To read about The Top 20 Under 20 and their amazing achievements, go to www.top20under20.ca.

■ For the month of May, the main lobby of St. James campus was transformed into an art gallery as the city-wide CONTACT photography festival made George Brown College one of its locations. You are Here showcased the work of photographers Ruth Skinner (an Information Specialist at Casa Loma), Krista Ellis and Jason Leizer (graduates of George Brown's ConEd photography certificate program), and Rupert Lazarus. This year is the first time George Brown has been involved in CONTACT which is the largest event of its kind in North America, featuring more than 400 local, national and international artists.

SUCCESS IN THE CITY

■ Congratulations to Alex Barbier, retired George Brown Athletic Director, who has once again attained legendary status by being inducted into the Ontario College Athletic Association (OCAA) Hall of Fame on Wednesday, May 4, 2005. He was inducted as a 'builder' which is an individual who has been vital to his or her college's athletic program and also a tremendous contributor to Ontario college athletics and recreation. In addition to serving as treasurer of the OCAA Executive Committee, Alex's most noted achievements were his advocacy for women's sports and ensuring equal opportunities for all colleges in terms of participation. He has also served for many years as a convener in sports such as men's basketball, women's basketball, and men's volleyball. It is truly great to see that Alex is not only a prominent figure in the George Brown community, but in the entire college system as well.

■ Put your hands together for Gillian Johnston, a professor in the Career and Work Counselling program, for being named the 2005 International Career Development Professional of the Year by the National Career Development Association (NCDA). For the past two years, Gillian has been on a leave from George Brown College, working at Sharjah Women's College in the United Arab Emirates. She is a faculty member and the curriculum developer for the Bachelor of Education, Career Advising and Career Counselling program. Sharjah Women's College recognizes her as being "a driving force behind the development of the profession of career counselling." The NCDA award recognizes an individual who has made a significant contribution to the field of career development on an international level. Gillian will receive her award at the NCDA's Global Conference on June 22. In September 2006, Gillian will be back in the classroom teaching at George Brown.

In recognizing that our students aren't the only ones destined for great things, Success in the City, acknowledges and applauds the innovation, intelligence and dedication of College administration, staff and faculty. To submit an item about a person within the College who has been honoured for his or her achievements and community spirit, please send the recipient's name and information about the award to cwong@gbrown.on.ca.
